INTRODUCTION

In order to conduct a comprehensive comparison among solid waste management system alternatives it is necessary to identify the equipment required and to identify and compare the economics of each, including initial and operating costs. A good source of information on equipment and initial costs are the manufacturers themselves. Many of the technical requests received by this office from persons desiring information on equipment include questions about manufacturers, equipment available, and costs. The following lists were compiled to answer these requests and will be periodically updated.

It is very difficult to keep lists of manufacturers current, especially with the recent emphasis placed upon the quality of our environment. Not only are more companies manufacturing solid waste management equipment, but older ones are expanding their lines, changing their addresses, creating new environmental divisions, and changing their names. Also, many of the manufacturers were not contacted directly to verify this compilation and to check whether the companies still manufacture the equipment. Any additions, deletions, or corrections on these lists would be appreciated. Please send them to:

These lists are intended to be of manufacturers only although some distributors (especially for foreign-made products) are included. These manufacturers can supply information on their local distributors.

The inclusion or exclusion of any manufacturer does not imply endorsement or lack of endorsement by the U.S. Government.

Again, the lists contained herein do not necessarily contain all of the manufacturers of the equipment noted. These lists were compiled from the information available to us at the time of publication and will be updated as new information is received.
